Not only has he tattooed all 50 state capitals, he also has a "lot of odd jobs," including "heavy construction work." This was Rose's first tattoo, and in order to get a part-time job he had to tattoo it to prove himself. Rose said he would tattoo a store entrance, and then get hired to do an entire restaurant. Rose's fascination with tattoos began in 2000, after he was offered a job with a "modern-day Harley-Davidson shop." The shop did not allow tattoos, so Rose tattooed the words "modern-day Harley-Davidson shop" on his left arm. After a grueling interview where Rose received only a shake of the hand, Rose knew that this job was meant for him. "I was like, 'It's a modern-day Harley-Davidson shop – there's only two of them in the world. I'm going to make money working on Harley-Davidsons.'" From there, Rose began tattooing as a hobby. He then traveled all over the country doing tattoos at various Harley-Davidson shops and eventually opened his own shop. Now, Rose has his own website where he posts sketches for people to fill in to their favorite design. The sketches are then uploaded to the website, and then someone buys the design. "A lot of artists come in and think they can just draw like that and it's going to sell. But it's like that doesn't work like that," Rose said. "You really need somebody to help you. If you just think you can do it, you'll end up with something mediocre." Rose says that he's not really known in his hometown
